

Isadora Duncan Charms
By Her Classic Dancing

By Sylvester Rawling.

ISADORA DUNCAN, assisted by half a dozen pupils from her school at Bellevue, near Paris, at the Metropolitan Opera House last night, gave a figurative in dance form of some of the works of great composers. Never, it seemed to me, did Miss Duncan reach such poignant poetic interpretation. In Beethoven's seventh symphony, in Schubert's "unfinishing" symphony, and in waltzes by Schubert and Brahms she compelled respect and admiration. The new restraint in her impassioned illustration of the "Marsellaise" gave it added strength and Tachakowsky's "Marche Slave" furnished her the opportunity through her medium of bodily interpretation, to picture a nation enslaved and then unshackled. "America" before the "Marsellaise" brought the house to its feet in a torrent of applause. Ganne's "Marche Lorraine" gave Miss Duncan's pupils a chance to show their charms and graces. The orchestra, principally made up of members of the Philharmonic, was led again by Mr. Spiretti in a masterful and convincing manner.

Artist pupils of the Elinor Comstock Conservatory of Music, assisted by a symphony orchestra conducted by Arnold Volpe, gave a concert at Ansonia Hall yesterday afternoon for the benefit of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund. There was a large audience that was generous in applause.

Blue Law Does Not Stop You Working in Garden Sunday.
BOSTON, April 25.—Judge John Perrins of the West Roxbury Court refused today to summon sixteen citizens, reported by the police for working in their gardens Sunday. A bill to repeal blue laws which prohibit such labor is pending in the Legislature.
